

Mealey's Franchise Law Report reports on litigation in federal and state courts related to franchising. The report also covers regulatory and legislative developments. Litigation arising under industry-specific laws, such as motor vehicle, gasoline and alcohol laws, is also covered.

Litigation Snapshot

Franchisees and franchisors face legal claims arising under federal and state laws and in courts and administrative proceedings. Lawsuits may involve class actions and multidistrict litigation. The topics are procedural and substantive. While many of the legal issues are specific to franchise systems, others involve commercial relationships, intellectual property protections, contractual relationships, tort claims, environmental liability and bankruptcy. The parties include franchisors, franchisees, consumers, employees, dealers, manufacturers, suppliers and vendors. Emerging issues involve data breaches, dual employer status, pricing of products, direct sales and advertising. Industries are as diverse as include automotive, food, hospitality, healthcare and real estate.
